FATHERS TO SUBMIT PLAN FOR IMPROVING HIGH SCHOOL FIELD

Take Steps Which They Hope Will Result in Fine Playing Field

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Fathers Willing To Place The Grounds in Good Condition If Board Maintains Such

The Fathers Association of the Bristol public schools took steps last evening which members hope will ultimately result in improving the condition of the high school field. The condition of the field is such, it is said, that football players sustain minor injuries, uniforms are torn, and some football teams have refused to schedule games here because of condition of the field.

At a meeting of the association last evening a resolution was adopted wherein the association agrees to have the field placed in proper condition providing the school board will agree to see that the field is maintained as it should be. It is estimated that the Fathers' Association would be called upon to make an expenditure of approximately $1,000 to recondition the field. The school board would be required to employ a man for at least six months of the year, during favorable weather, keeping the grounds in condition.

Acting chairman of the athletic committee, Charles J. Bowen, made the report of the committee which is headed by Clarence Bartholomew. Other committee members are: Michael Petrick, Dr. John G. Steele, Charles Weik and Fred Weik.

This matter will be laid before the school directors for consideration. The Fathers' Association have not decided upon any definite plan whereby the money necessary can be raised, although several plans were considered.

The condition of the field is such it is stated, that some football teams refuse absolutely to schedule games with Bristol, and thereby subject their players to injuries. The top soil has deteriorated to such an extent that stones are through onto the surface. The drains are blocked; and cleats last but about two games, being worn off by contact with the stony surface. The field is also said to be in poor condition for baseball games, and girls' hockey teams have found it almost impossible to play there.

The presiding officer was Thomas Coles.

Dorothy Green and Roy Fry invited the association members to be their guests at a Christmas dinner at the December meeting. The two will then entertain with a night of "magic."

Sunday School Sup't Is Tendered Farewell Party

A surprise farewell party was given to John Gamble, Croydon Manor, Tuesday evening in the Zion Lutheran Church parish house. Members of the Luther League, Sunday School and church gathered to extend their good wishes to Mr. Gamble. Mr. Gamble, who has been employed by Bruden and Wallace, Mill street, for many years, has accepted a position with Bauer Brothers, Springfield, O.

The Rev. Paul R. Ronge read from 2 Timothy 2:4, and expressed the gratitude of the group to Mr. Gamble who was superintendent of the Sunday School, secretary of the church, and president of the Luther League. His Sunday School class of boys presented him with a gift of a belt. The Rev. and Mrs. Ronge presented a book "God's Reach for Man" followed by a purse from the Sunday School members and church. After refreshments were served the party adjourned with singing "Blessed be the tie that binds."

Russell Guither, who was received into fellowship with the church last Sunday, has accepted the call to the superintendence of the Sunday School. His son, Russell Francis Guither, will take over Mr. Gamble's class of boys. In the years of service under Mr. Gamble the school has increased in regular attendance 30%.

IN SCHOOL PLAY

WINIFRED KELLY

WINIFRED KELLY IN LEADING ROLE

Will Play the Part of Barbara Pearson in High School Sketch Tonight

IS GOOD ACTRESS

The character of "Barbara Pearson" in the sketch "What a Life," which opens tonight in the Bristol high school auditorium, will be portrayed by Winifred Kelly. Miss Kelly takes the part well, and is sure to do it justice at the opening performance this evening.

Barbara Pearson may be described as a sweet, naive girl of 16 with lovely blonde hair and a charming smile. In appearance she is very neat.

She is extremely popular with the students as can be seen by her being elected president of the Junior class.

This is the beginning of her troubles, for at one of the faculty meetings it was proposed that the daily assembly exercises be conducted by the individual holding that position. In fact, because of this she almost makes herself hate the Bible and God. Her popularity is also perceived in the fact that two boys invite her to attend a school dance. Because of this, several problems arise to confront her. First, she must choose with whom she will go; next, she must decide what she is to wear. Finally, she worries about whether she will look pretty enough and if anyone will ask her to dance. All these troubles put her into a crying mood so that her fears are dispelled only after the principal's secret comforters her.

Evidently she is an honest student, for when she finds out that Henry Aldrich has copied from another student's test paper, she is heartbroken.

On the whole, Barbara Pearson can be said to be an interesting and refreshing character.

AMERICA AND JAPAN

This country's traditional foreign policy contemplates honorable peace with all the world. The scope of this doctrine is broad enough to include Japan. Officials reiterate their desire to avoid fighting in the Pacific, and the next day the cables transmit jingo utterances by the Japs that make peaceful solution of the Orient problem all the more difficult.

Washington officials are particularly pessimistic when they contemplate the conversations between Japan's special envoy and Secretary of State Hull. If their viewpoint is to be accepted, the Washington conference is foredoomed to failure.

Japan is one of the axis partners, but a study of the three-power agreement reveals numerous loopholes. If there were no chance to avoid war with America, the long and laborious trip of Saburo Kurusu to this country would lack reasonable explanation. The very fact that he is sitting down with Secretary Hull to review the situation must be regarded as evidence of Japan's hope that war can be avoided. Japan's hopes are based on the slim chance that she can bluff the United States into dropping its opposition to her campaign of conquest.

But at the moment Japan is desperately anxious to save her face. She made an unfortunate alliance, guessed wrong, talked too much bluster and was guilty of grave wrongs that the United States could not condone. The Oriental mind does not permit an open confession of these mistakes. It seeks to approach the desired end by a more devious route.

There can be no thought in Washington of appeasement, but there can be a demonstration of sincere willingness to consider the issues on a basis of their merits. This country does not want to fight Japan, and Japan is equally anxious to keep the peace—if she is permitted to keep the present and future foot. Thus diplomacy faces a supreme test. There is greater need to aid the diplomats in finding an honorable way out than there is for warmongers who seem to be charmed by the sound of their own voices.

WAR AND EXPLORATION

Resignation of Dr. Roy Chapman Andrews as head of the American Museum of Natural History comes at the end of thirty-five years of connection with that institution and twenty-eight of almost uninterrupted field explorations in various parts of the world.

But the exploration business has gone bang. In the world crisis funds for that purpose are dwindling. War limits the field of possible operations. Doctor Andrews quit because, an explorer at heart, he has little taste for executive duties. The world today is more engrossed in trying to find out what is going to happen to mankind than in digging up the past.

The decision of Doctor Andrews, a noted explorer in many regions, is that of a man of action who cannot content himself with relative inactivity, however honorable. After his long experience he is only fifty-seven. In the days of peace there may yet be vouchsafed to him some years in which to gratify his investigative genius.

The weather is against him in Russia. Hitler complains. Were he still mortal, Napoleon could tell him all about the Russian weather.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

"Somebody moving in?" asked Mrs. Blaydes-Steele, leaning on the cemetery wall.

Bert, looking up, said, "Yes, sir. E's in the house."

Yves was interested. Vine Cottage was one of the few houses in Weyland which did not belong to his brother. It was the property of a lady who lived much abroad.

A tall, neat-looking fellow appeared in the doorway of the little house, looked at the ruined gatepost, "Hell's bells!" he exclaimed.

"You don't make me very welcome," she said, her eyes on his face. "Perhaps if it had been Anne, you might have been a little more effusive."

At the mention of Countess de Vassagine's name, a mask seemed to drop over his features and the girl went on, "So you're still infatuated!"

"I find this conversation extremely distasteful," he replied coldly.

The little laugh she gave held no humor in it. "Why, my poor Philip," she said, her voice more gentle, "can't you see through her? Don't you realize she'll just use you as she has used so many others?"

When she's got what she wants from you, you'll be through."

"Oh, please," he said, "don't let's have this cheap good-fellow stuff. I can't stand it."

He made no reply and she continued, her voice growing in vehemence. "Through, I tell you! Finished! Like that wretched little Billy Harding who shot himself... Oh, Philip, Philip, how can you be so blind? Why, you don't stand a chance of making the grade with her!"

Something in his expression halted her speech... some little thicker at the back of his eyes brought her up short... her hand going to her shaking lips. He did not speak but she guessed.

"Philip!" she gasped. "Have you...?" She caught him by the arm, her fingers digging into his flesh. Her eyes searfed his frantically.

"Be quiet!" he rasped. "You're making an exhibition of yourself!"

She laughed hysterically. "An exhibition of myself? That's rich, Philip!" she retorted. "It doesn't matter about me any more. I've served my purpose and I can get out of your life now."

The girl collapsed against the kitchen table, bursting into a storm of tears. Horton, frowning, crossed the room and stooped over the case of whisky. There came the opening of a cupboard door, the clink of glass, and a moment or so later he was back at her side.

"Here," he said, "drink this and pull yourself together."

Awkwardly he laid a hand on her shoulder and gave it a little squeeze and a shake. This unlooked-for friendly gesture had the effect of increasing the girl's sobbing. With a helpless shrug, he put the glass down at her side and moved across to the window to stare moodily out into the garden.

Presently he heard the click of the glass held in an unsteady hand against her teeth, and soon after a husky voice said, "I'm sorry, Philip. I'm terribly sorry, Pip, but..."

"What'll it be?" he asked.

"Scotch and splash," replied the other, his cockney speech confirming the proprietor's suspicions. "Will you join me?" he asked hospitably.

"Join me?" she replied, the other, "but not just yet. Still too early in the evening."

"Well, here's mud-in-your-eye! Bit out of the way round this part of the world, aren't you?" he went on.

"What'll it be?" he asked.

"Maybe," agreed ex-Detective Sergeant Beef, finishing his S-and-S. "I'm newspaper man," he stated outrageously, adding: "Name of Smith."

"A newspaper man," echoed the other. "From London likely?"

"All the way," nodded Beef.

"On a murder assignment; old cove, name of Pennyfeather. Did you know him?"

"I did."

"Nice sort o' ol' bloke, was he?"

"He was a gentleman, indeed."

"What's the talk in the village?"

asked Beef nodding for the other to refill his glass.

"Ar, plenty! But no conclusions."

"What, no one got any theories?"

"Not a soul! Mr. Pennyfeather was that liked. There was not a man nor woman nor child nor beast in Weyland as would 'ave raised an 'and to 'im in hanger."

"Lummel!" said the pseudo-reporter. "Looks like a real mystery. I been tryin' to locate the local cop in charge of the case. Rainbird I think 'e calls himself."

Gunplay Occurs in Mine Strike

Pittsburgh, Nov. 20 — Gunplay on both sides broke out today in the Pennsylvania sector of the captive mine strike with a union picket shot down allegedly by non-strikers outside a Fayette County mine and the unionists retaliating with a burst of gunfire at a mine superintendent's automobile.

The mine official, James Maher, escaped unhurt but the union picket was rushed to Brownsville Hospital in serious condition—his right shoulder shattered by a revolver bullet.

The unionists' versions of the shooting—first violence in Pennsylvania since the strike began—was that a Negro non-striker opened fire on the picket line outside the Edentown Mine of the H. C. Frick Coke Company near Masontown. Ernest Metzner, 29, clumped to the roadside as the first shots rang out.

Churchill Announces Offensive in Libya

London, Nov. 20 — Prime Minister Churchill today officially announced commencement of a major offensive against Axis forces in Libya designed to blast German and Italian forces in the western desert out of existence.

Comanned land, sea and air action against the enemy is proceeding "according to plan," Churchill said, and within a short time the rain-soaked desert battlefield will see British and Axis forces locked in a major conflict destined to seal the future of the Mediterranean.

Complete destruction of the enemy or elimination of the long-standing threat to Suez is the primary objective of the campaign, Churchill revealed. Churchill stated the objective of the Libyan offensive is "destruction of the enemy and primarily its armored forces." This consideration was deemed to overshadow the aim of occupation of territory.

If the drive progresses according to plan, Churchill said, the enemy armored forces will be destroyed or seriously defeated and Britain will dominate the air.

Then, it was stated, the plight of the enemy infantry and artillery units, towed into Libyan coastal regions, will "become serious." For this reason, Churchill said, the outcome of the campaign depends upon the armored forces and "may be settled one way or another, perhaps in a few hours."

He stated that at the start of the offensive heavy rains hampered the movement of the advancing British forces. Authorities declared, however, that the rains along the coast were heavier than they were deeper in the desert and thus were "likely to harm the enemy more than the British."

BEAUTY PARADE

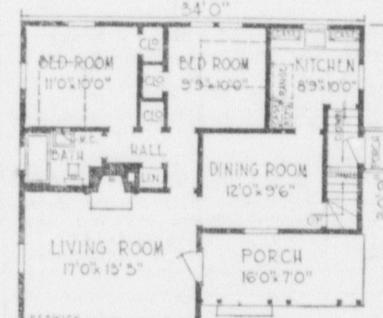

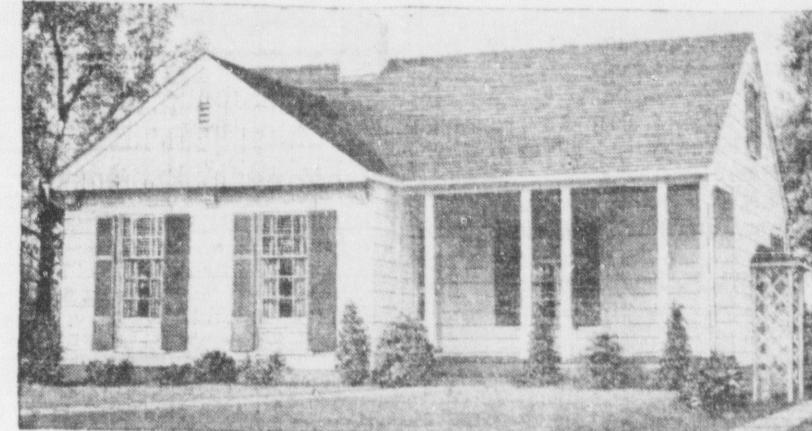

By Max Factor, Jr.
Famous Hollywood Make-Up Specialist Writing for I. N. S.
HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Don't practice the art of make-up the hard way. Follow the directions which come with your make-up materials.

It is amazing how many women aren't well made-up as they might be, simply because they don't follow the directions which come, either with a make-up item, or in a booklet which can be had for the asking.

Some don't even read these instructions. Others read them and then, for some mysterious reason, apparently conclude that they know more about "correct" application than the scientist who created these aids to beauty.

Rouge instructions will state that it should be patted on with a rouge puff, and that it very definitely shouldn't be rubbed on. This instruction has reason behind it. Patted-on rouge creates a much more natural and beautiful effect than can be achieved by rubbing it on, and it is actually easier to apply by the patting method. Yet countless women insist on rouging the hard way and the wrong way.

Washington, D. C., mentioning Design 2-1-12-T.

Paint the "Keswick" white and the roof and shutters dark green for a pleasing color contrast. Vertical siding on the front gable, and the lattice at the kitchen entrance, are distinctive touches. The interior arrangement is planned for family convenience with plenty of closets and attic storage reached from the dining room. The spacious living room is adorned by a well-designed fireplace. Hall space reduced to a minimum with the sleeping quarters separated from the rest of the house.

Lipstick instructions stress the point that this glamor asset should be applied only to dry lips. Thousands of women pay no attention to this instruction, and then wonder why their lip rouge won't stay on as perfectly as it should.

Instructions also advise against using lipstick too heavily. Yet many go on wasting lipstick and the money which it costs, and finally achieve an unattractively smeary lip effect, by ignoring this advice.

Eye make-up instructions include those which advise that eyelash makeup be applied to the upper lashes first, and with an upward stroke; that the lower lashes require a downward stroke; and that the lashes should be separated after such applications have been completed.

Look about and observe how many women fail to follow such simple and logical instructions as these. Or, to get a trifle closer to home, analyze your own eye make-up proceedings. See how closely you have or have not been following these instructions.

Instructions for the application of face powder are the ones most frequently ignored. This is largely due to house committee, appointed Walter R. Lewis, Horace D. Bellery and Henry Cottrol to serve on the canteen committee during December, and Walter Bachman, William Smith and Russell Gulick are designated to serve on the committee during January.

The following committee was appointed to prepare for the distribution of baskets of food among needy families during Christmas: William Smith, William A. May, Russell B. Gulick and Andrew H. Schott.

William Harris announced that the Red Cross is conducting first aid classes in the K. G. E. building in Doylestown, and members of the post were invited to enroll.

Stanley W. Bowers, treasurer of the post's U. S. O. committee, stated that $18.50 had been collected in Doylestown and vicinity, and that this amount had been forwarded to headquarters.

On display at the meeting was a framed photograph of the H. M. S. Manchester, which is in dry dock in the Philadelphia Navy Yard for reconditioning. This photograph was presented to the post by H. E. Courtnage and James Peakens, chief petty officers of the vessel, who were the guests of the post at its Armistice Day banquet.

Air Raid Warden Is Speaker Before P. T. A.

isolate, with each county then naming a committee and forming its organization.

The many phases of activities under the plan, such as nutrition, refugee housing, first aid instruction, etc., were considered; all this work being definitely outlined, and well under way, with numerous community organizations aiding. Mr. Blair told of the work of the emergency police, an endeavor being made to organize such a force in each community, trained to care for evacuation should such be needed. The duty of the emergency police to guard defense industries, power centers, etc., was mentioned, with drills being held periodically.

To clarify the activities in the minds of all, Mr. Blair told how, in case of an emergency, such as an air raid, Bucks County defense volunteers would make things more difficult for the invader. He added that "black-outs" as carried out in Bucks County be prepared for any emergency, and not find ourselves in the position of many people in Europe." He told how the flux would be from the main cities to the rural counties nearby. Bucks being one of the counties to care for the refugees, caring to them possibly for any period up to 48 hours, before passing them on to less thickly populated counties. He mentioned that the first essential is to keep military highways clear, thus some thoroughfares have been designated for military travel, and others for individuals or refugees, in case of invasion.

The Red Cross instructors' courses in first aid, now being held, were told of, those completing the course being qualified to instruct others. The speaker told that the general opinion is there should be one air raid warden for every 50 families.

The item of the "black-out" was clarified, Mr. Blair informing that the reason for planning "black-outs" for even the smaller towns is that many of them, on direct lines between sea-coast cities and inland cities important as defense centers, would if lighted, form a "light" in a chain of communities leading to the defense cities. Thus "black-outs" of towns on the routes would make things more difficult for the invader.

He added that "black-outs" as carried out in Bucks County thus far have been fairly successful, with some perfection being needed. He told of direct telephone wires leading to key points in this and other counties. "Thus Bucks County can be covered through the alarm telephone system in 3½ to 3¾ minutes when a 'black-out' is required," he informed.

Mr. Blair asked for co-operation of all, adding that "Patriotic citizens will co-operate."

A card party is arranged for December 1st, to be held in the local fire station, with Ned Moyer and Miss Margaret Perry in charge.

Grades two and three received the attendance award, and will retain the bowl of gold-fish for the next month.

Mrs. Charlotte Walsh, first grade teacher, was introduced.

The president, Mrs. Mucklow, will represent the local organization at the meeting of the "Committee of '46" in Doylestown on December 5th.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Walter Haas and Mrs. William Perry.

A number of Boy Scouts of Hulmeville troop attended the meeting.

Bucks County Soroptimists Hear Dr. Harriet J. Davis

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 20—Dr. Harriet J. Davis, county seat physician, addressed members of the Soroptimist Club of Bucks County at the Bucks County Inn, here, Monday evening.

Dr. Davis' subject was "Social Diseases."

During a discussion, presided over by the president, Miss E. Helaine Lintelman, plans were made to abandon one of their own meetings and assist in giving the guests at the Bucks County Home a Christmas party some time next month.

The Soroptimists, in association with several other County Seat organizations, including the V. I. A., which began the idea last year assisted in providing gifts for the men and women who were the guests of the various women's clubs.

President Lintelman read an invitation from the New England Regional Conference of Soroptimists Clubs inviting the Bucks Soroptimists to attend a two-day conference in Boston on November 29th and 30th.

If it is possible, the club hopes to have President Lintelman represent them at the conference.

There were four guests, Mrs. Edward G. Biester, Miss Isabelle Lyman, Mrs. Loverin and Mrs. J. Richard Dyer.

Mrs. Mildred B. Gulick led the singing and Mrs. Frank X. Shelly was at the piano.

A Juicy Steak Rings Dinner Bell Loudest

Modern Broiling Methods Make Any Member of Family A Good Cook

There's no surpassing the appeal of a good juicy steak. A steak cut thick and cooked properly will be more flavorful and juicy and at the same time serve as many people as the same amount of meat in smaller steaks.

Steaks for Any Size Family

Whether for two, four, or six, there are steaks which will be the right size to serve. For the large family, sirloin steaks from the loin end perhaps will be the best choice. T-bone and porterhouse from the shortloin will also serve the average family generously. For the smaller family club steaks are a wise selection. When cut thick a club steak will serve two. Club steaks also make very attractive individual servings.

Modern Broiling

Broiling according to modern methods is so easy that most members of the family can do it.

A low temperature, says Inez S. Willson, home economist, is the important factor in broiling a steak if a juicy, uniformly broiled steak is the product desired. The steak will be deliciously browned on the surface and a delicate pink color on the interior.

Place the steak on the broiler rack in the oven so the top surface of the steak is three inches from the source of heat for two-inch steaks and two inches from the source of heat for steaks one inch thick or less. With the regulator on the range set for broiling and the steaks set at these distances from the source of heat, the temperature at the surface of the steak will be approximately 350 degrees F. which is a moderate temperature.

Regulation Temperature

If the broiler of the oven is not constructed so as to permit the recommended distance between the top surface of the meat and the source of heat then the temperature control should be regulated accordingly.

A broiled steak requires only one turning. When the upper surface is nicely browned, season and turn. It is wise to turn a steak by inserting the fork in the fat. Broil until this side is brown and the steak is ready to be served. Allow 35 minutes for the broiling period of a medium-done steak about one and one-half inches thick. Allow 45 minutes for a two-inch steak. If steaks cooked to the rare stage are desired the broiling time can be decreased five minutes.

THANKSGIVING CALLS FOR A SPECIAL PLAN FOR TEMPTING MENUS

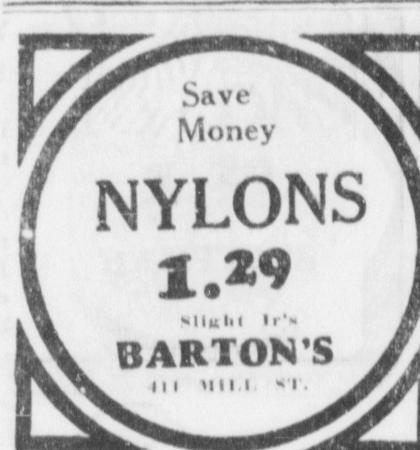

By Miss Edna Stephany
(Home Economics Representative)

Turkey still reigns supreme for the Thanksgiving dinner, but choose the trimmings with an eye to the budget and nutritive value.

This doesn't mean that anything traditional needs to be sacrificed from this American feast. With planning it is easy to include old-time favorites along with the recommended foods we eat for health.

If turkey with dressing is the main feature on the menu, save onions with it. Dress them up to fit the occasion—cucumbers and cream cheese, or sprinkle buttered bread crumbs over cooked onions and brown in the oven. For the green vegetable to add color and food value to the Thanksgiving meal, plan to have broccoli, Brussels sprouts, or kale. Baked sweet potatoes are an excellent addition to the dinner.

For relishes on an occasion like this, serve the traditional cranberry sauce, raw carrot strips, and celery curls. And if you like and have them, mustard pickles add extra zest.

GOAL LINE BLUES HIT BACKS AND UPSET REFEREE

Touchbacks Are Many This Fall As Boys Falter At Goal

CLAUSE IS CLARIFIED

Any Play Near The Pay-Off Territory Is Tense

By Jack Gill

Pause to reflect preceding chapters on gridiron fundamentals and you'll realize the plight that Morrisville's Coach John Hoffman was plagued with last Friday afternoon. He, too, must have thought about ball handling and its respective merits in a typical high school game.

Bud McAllister, labelled by many as the best all-round back in the conference, had the ball in his clutch locomoting down touchdown junction. Battering his way off the 2 yard line, he fumbled the ball over the goal and Princeton High School regained possession.

For the fourth straight year the Little Tigers staved off Morrisville's victory bid. McAllister pulled his butt-ringer in the last quarter when it seemed sure the Bulldogs would tally. Through the course of the afternoon Morrisville backs bobbled the ball six times. That's a good average.

In a carbon copy replica, a Burlington team fumbled over Bristol's goal line in the dying minutes of the Bristol-Burlington game here two weeks ago. So instead of winning 12-6, the Blue Devils had to be content with a tie.

The obvious reasons for occasional miscues are apparent in any average contest. But the increased bobbles witnessed this year on local lots seem to be without foundation. Hard tackling, particularly down at the goal line with the backer-up coming in fast, tenseness and the urge to do something with the ball "in hurry," are the main contributing factors. But vicious defensive work hasn't been in vogue all year. The boys seem downright nervous.

Many coaches are teaching and telling their protégés to tackle for the ball this year, however, which may be one of the reasons for so many fumbles. Failsington stole a touchdown from Langhorne this way.

Before another week passes with somebody else fumbling a ball before he is brought to earth in the end zone, let's try to get this safety-touchback clause cleared. Touchbacks were ruled in both cases as the Burlington and Morrisville backs fumbled the ball on their way over the goal line.

The impetus angle is all important here. On a two point safety, the impetus must come from the team defending the goal. On a touchback, the impetus is supplied by the opponent. On the two above mentioned, the attacking offensive team and not the defending team generated the impetus. The fact to remember is that the defensive team, the unit defending against the attacking team, must supply the impetus on a safety. If they don't, then it's always a touchback.

One well known scholastic referee pulled a prize boomer on the Bristol High School field this year in miscon-struing a touchback for a safety. But the game was played, the rival coach never uttered a word of complaint and everyone went home happy. For three weeks in succession Henry Morgan, local official, has had such decisions to render in sandlot games at South Langhorne and on each occasion he has called the play correctly.

It causes such great argumentation because it's so close to the goal line. Any play down near the pay-off territory is tense.

LANGHORNE PLAYS MORRISVILLE XI

Langhorne High School travels to Morrisville today to meet the Bulldogs in a game that was postponed from earlier in the season owing to infantile paralysis. The Redskins still haven't won a game this season, while Morrisville has been beaten but once.

Heading the Bulldogs' attack will be Bud McAllister and Whipper Wallace, while Andy LaRue and Hibbs are expected to take care of anything that Langhorne has to offer in the way of an offense. Langhorne, beaten by Ben Salem, 20 to 18 last week, is led by little Lou Spattacino, scampering back and Norman Knox. Their only offense is a passing attack, however, and Morrisville has been alert on this defense all year.
